A guide to kayak touring in the Chesapeake Bay

How to enjoy multi-day trips using water trails on the Potomac and the Patuxent

Kayak touring is the art of taking multi-day trips. In the Washington, DC area, two water trails on the Potomac and the Patuxent rivers offer great opportunities to get started. Above, hammock and tent camping at Chapel Point State Park on the Maryland side of the Potomac. (Photo: Ralph Heimlich)

Have you ever wondered about kayaking and camping out of your boat? There are many places you can do an overnight on the water at a paddle-in campsite. The Chesapeake Bay Water Access Map on the CPA website lists a total of 64 paddle-in sites around the greater Bay area.

However, if you want to take a multi-day trip where you paddle from site to site along a route (known as kayak touring), your options are more limited. This article focuses on two well-developed water trails that follow the Patuxent River in Maryland and the mid-Potomac River forming the border between Maryland and Virginia.

To work best, water trails for kayak touring require a series of paddle-in campsites that are approximately one day's paddling (about 10-12 miles) apart. Ideally, they would all be managed by the same authority and have put-ins with secure overnight parking for your vehicle. We are not quite there in all cases, but the "bones" of well-organized kayak touring water trails are in place on the Patuxent and Potomac Rivers.

Most sites are managed by the county in which they are located, and state parks generally handle their own paddle-in campsite reservations. They are generally not listed on state online camping reservation sites. Adding to the confusion is that many staff at these parks are not

Excitement builds for getting out on the water

Happy June!

Summer is here and most of us are itching to get out on the water.

I recently led a leisure paddle that turned into a two-day event since I had more than 40 people sign up.

As it turned out I only had 16 actual paddlers with five on Saturday and eleven on Sunday.

I have been leading leisure paddles over the last several years with usually a small handful signing up but this year I think everyone is tired of being cooped up and anxious to get out. I had several experienced paddlers with a few real beginners, so it was a nice mix.

My neighbor was one of the beginners who told me she was always petrified about turning over but after this trip she told me her fears are behind her, this was her first time in a kayak.

I am looking forward to leading more trips this year since everyone is so enthusiastic about paddling and socializing. It was so nice to load boats and socialize without wearing a mask or worry about getting too close to someone.

This year I am hoping to explore more places to paddle, it is so easy to launch in a familiar area but that also gets routine, so I plan to do more exploratory paddles this year.

Circumnavigation of Lake Superior

One of the experienced paddlers to join my Saturday paddle was Bee Dawson. Most of us who know Bee also know she is planning on a circumnavigation of Lake Superior starting in May 2022.

Bill Smith

I grew up in Great Lakes country and have always been infatuated with the lakes with Lake Superior the granddaddy of them all. I am envious of her goal and wish her the best. I will be following her journey closely.

The lake, which is the largest freshwater lake in the world in area and third largest in volume, has over 2,700 miles of shoreline.

The shoreline is mostly undeveloped with several National, State or Provincial parks along the way. There are a few towns or cities dotting the shore with the largest being Duluth, Minnesota but almost the entire length is remote or wilderness.

The scenery is excellent with a lot of wildlife you will never see in the Chesapeake Bay region including wolves, caribou, black bear and moose.

Bee plans to start her journey at Whitefish point near the town of Paradise, Michigan to take advantage of the more southern region on the lake. Whitefish Point is also the home of the Edmund Fitzgerald museum and near the final resting place for the ship.

The shoreline is very rocky with sometimes miles between suitable landing spots. In May, she can expect weather extremes with the possibility of some snow not out of the question.

During my many visits to the lake, I have experienced summer weather ranging from 50 degrees up to 100 degrees with water temperatures rarely higher than 55 degrees. Can you imagine wearing a wet suit in 100-degree weather?

I hope I did not jinx her trip by writing about it, but I am excited for her.

Happy Paddling!

aware that they even HAVE paddle-in sites to reserve, stemming from their infrequent use. Be prepared to insist and speak to a supervisor if your initial contact is negative. Fees generally run about $20 to $25 per night and are payable when you make the reservation.

Kayak Touring on the Patuxent Water Trail

There are currently 11 paddle-in campsites that make up the Patuxent Water Trail. They are documented in what is now the 4th edition of the Patuxent River Water Trail Guide and GPS-Ready Map, created by CPA member Dave Linthicum and available through the Patuxent Riverkeeper and at the visitor centers of the Jug Bay Wetlands Sanctuary (AA county) and Jug Bay Natural Area (PG county).

A good launch for the upper part of the water trail is the Queen Anne Canoe Launch (at mile 53, measured upstream from the Drum Point light). You can obtain the gate code and parking passes for overnight parking here (and at Selby Landing) from MNCCPC at Jug Bay Natural Area.

When considering a kayak tour of the Patuxent, you need to think about arranging a shuttle since the distances involved can be substantial (53 river miles from Solomons Island to Queen Anne Canoe Launch). Many of the camp sites are relatively close to each other, but on opposite sides of the river, so a large loop route may be advisable (e.g., Selby Landing to White Oak Landing, then to Spice Creek, and back up to Emory Landing, then return to Selby Landing).

Tides are another consideration, since this entire stretch of the river is tidal. The tidal difference on the river is not great (about 1-2 feet), but it is a lot easier paddling WITH the tide than AGAINST it.

Consider setting your departure times to coincide with the tide moving in your direction (up or down stream). River current is negligible, except in the top five miles or so (river miles 48-53), so don't count on much help from the current.

In descending order down the river, the campsites are:

- Mile 51: Stockett's Run campsite (AA County)
- Mile 44a: Iron Pot Landing (MNCPPC, up Western Branch)
- Mile 41a: Emory Landing (AA County)
- Mile 41: Selby Canoe Camp (MNCPPC)
- Mile 40: Selby Landing (MNCPPC)
- Mile 40a: White Oak Landing (MNCPPC, up Mattaponi Creek)

- Mile 35a: Spice Creek (MNCPPC, at the mouth of Spice Creek)
- Mile 30: Milltown Landing (MNCPPC)
- Mile 23: Maxwell Hall (Charles County, up Swanson Creek)
- Mile 20: Indian Creek (Myrtle Grove WMA, up Indian Creek)
- Mile 9: Greenwell State Park (DNR, Point Lookout SP, up Hog Neck Creek)

Kayak Touring on the Tidal Potomac River

The situation on the Potomac River is less organized than on the Patuxent, partly because the river is the boundary between Maryland and Virginia, and partly because development of campsites on the river is more recent.

There is no official river distance signage on the Potomac, but I have created one using the center line mileage that approximates distance from the mouth of the river.

There are seven paddle-in campsites on the Virginia side of the river, and seven on the Maryland side.

- Mile 81: Lions Club Camp Merrick, MD (in the past, paddlers have pre-arranged to camp here)
- Mile 75: Friendship Landing Park, MD (there is a single tent platform on a steep bank up a small creek off Nanjemoy Creek northeast of Friendship Landing, first come-first served, no reservations)
- Mile 77: Caledon State Park, VA (six camp site areas serviced by a porta-potty, can be reserved or use the pay station)
- Mile 69: Chapel Point State Park, MD (a large open field with picnic table and fire ring a short ways up the Port Tobacco River, serviced by Charles County Parks department)
- Mile 56: Colonial Beach, VA (it may be possible to pre-arrange hotel/motel accommodations here for overnight stays)
- Mile 49: Westmoreland State Park, VA (a paddle-in campsite is located at the down-river end of the beach. There are also regular campsites about a mile up a steep paved road)
- Mile 43: Newtowne Neck State Park, MD (there are two paddle-in campsites here, one on Breton Bay to the east and one on Saint Clements Bay on the west of the peninsula)
- Mile 33: Coles Point Marina and Resort, VA (there is RV camping at this marina and they may accommodate paddle-in tent campers)
- Mile 23: Chancellor's Point Campground, MD (this is about 5 miles up the St. Marys River and consists of 6 tent pad sites)
- Mile 14: Point Lookout State Park, MD (there are 15 designated campsites which can be reserved on the Green and Hoffman Point waterside loops)

Training for kayak camping is not necessary, but remember that you are limited more by space (in your boat and through your hatches) than by weight. Even the smallest kayaks can carry much more weight than the typical back packer can handle. Compared to back packing, kayak camping can be considered "glamping"!

Pack everything that can be damaged by water in dry bags, even though it will be in the waterproof compartments (they aren't). Pack heavy items (cookware, food) closest to the cockpit and low in the boat, and lighter items (clothes, sleeping pads) in the ends of the kayak.

Water can be carried in flat skins or bags and packed in the cockpit under your legs or in front of the footpegs. Smaller collapsible containers like Platypus or Camelback bottles can be squeezed into spaces in the hatches.

It is a good idea to limit deck-loaded items because they negatively affect your kayak's stability and increase your windage. As far as clothes, consider limiting yourself to one set of paddling clothes and one set of "camp" clothes, rinsing and drying paddling clothes as needed.

Check the CPA calendar on Meetup for trips. Suzanne Farace is organizing a practice kayak camper on the Patuxent on July 24. While kayak camping isn't limited to summer, that is probably the best season to start because you can get by with fewer clothes and a less bulky sleeping bag.

The best way to learn about kayak camping is to get out there and try it!

Piracies, trips spring back to life

With vaccinations increasing and distancing decreasing, folks are smiling again! Piracies and trips have started up and are filling the CPA schedule.

Paddler Profile

Ron Kleiman: Poetry in motion

CPA members are a diverse and interesting bunch. Editor Ralph Heimlich has brought back the Paddler Profile series to introduce some of our many members who have generously taken the time to answer questions about themselves and kayaking.

This month: Ron Kleiman

Lives in: Williamsburg VA

Real job: Retired, having recently promoted myself to the well-earned title of Chief Visionary Officer and principle Seer.

Do you regularly attend a CPA Piracy? No.

Number of years paddling? I've been paddling in earnest for 17 years after a lengthy sabbatical from paddling canoes as a Cub Scout.

How did you get involved in sea kayaking? I became reacquainted with paddling after paying off my four kids' braces, education, weddings, etc. and unexpectedly realizing that there was now available some money for ME.

What boat(s) do you paddle? I own four Kayaks: a 17' Looksha IV with rudder; a 12' Crossover with skeg; a 12' Umiak for my grandkids; and an eight foot sit on top for the smaller (but not for long) grands.

Rudder or skeg? Either.

Type of paddle used? My preference in paddles is bent shaft euros, 220cm for ocean and 180cm for white water.

Do you do any other paddling than sea kayaking? White water kayaking. Other than kayaking my passions, in no apparent order, are: Haiku and other short form poetry; studying religion, philosophy, and history; shooting sports; ham radio; and photography.

Do any winter paddling? I paddle year round as long as I can find liquid water and have even paddled down snow covered sledding trails when I couldn't.

Favorite local paddling location? My favorite paddling spot is Jamestown Island, often using the circumnavigation as a workout paddle. If you haven't done that paddle you really should. There is a small harbor with full size reproductions of the three ships that Captain John Smith sailed on when he established the Jamestown settlement in the late 1500's. Paddling under those ships and shouting up "Ahoy Matey" to a young child looking down from the railing is always a high spot.

Favorite CPA trip you've ever been on and why?

Though not a "trip" I believe my favorite CPA experience is the SK102 instructional weekends at Lake Anna. There is a comradery that develops over the course of such an event which is enhanced by both the skill level and dedication of the instructors, the personalities of the participants and the obvious efforts of those organizing the weekend.

Coolest paddling trip you've ever been on anywhere and why? My "Coolest" paddles are those that I take with any of my 11 grand kids, ages five through 21. Introducing a young person to the joys of paddling and the natural world in which it is immersed is always special and being the cool Zadie is priceless.

Scariest/most dangerous paddling trip/incident and why? One fall weekend I was in my kayak patrolling the Delaware River as a member of the National Canoe Safety Patrol (an organization that works under the National Park Service to support the Rangers in keeping people safe of the river).

The air was cool and the river was running a bit higher than normal. My team included two experienced and two novices. We had just stopped for a lunch break overlooking Shohola Rapids, when we saw a kayak and two canoes approaching. Half way through the rapid the kayak went over. Nothing unusual, I sent one of novices to rescue the now soggy paddler.

A few seconds later one of the women in the first canoe stood up and toppled the boat, followed by someone in the second canoe also toppling. In a matter of a few seconds we had seven people in the water being carried swiftly downstream by the current. We scrambled into action, leaving our lunch for the local fauna.

Of the seven, thankfully, all are wearing life jackets, two are young children who are the only members of the party who speak English, three grandmothers in their 60's, two with heart conditions and all three with various other medical problems. All the women are wearing cotton saris.

At one point I had four people hanging from my boat. Long story short we were able to rescue all of them and have ambulances waiting for the older women when we got to a nearby take out.

Bucket list trips? I don't have one. In my view (and I'm sure there are others equally valid) life and happiness don't only happen at some future time at a distant location, they happen as soon as you open your eyes, in whatever place you find yourself there are unplanned adventures.

Three things you like most about paddling? Three things I like most about paddling: being alone in the company of others; campfires and martinis; the calm between the waves.

What do you like about CPA? I like CPA because a lot of selfless people contributing to shared experiences on the water or close to it. I have learned much and hope I have contributed to the education and amusement of others.

What other paddling clubs/groups do you belong to? Aside from CPA I am a member of Waters Edge, Hampton Roads Paddlers, Virginia Paddling, Fairfield County Paddlers, Kayaking the Liquid Sky's.

One unusual non-paddling thing we'd be surprised to know about you?
